Content-wise the biggest mistake I see businesses make is not providing their location and not explicitly letting people know why they should do business with you.

Comparing Wix and Zyro

Both Wix and Zyro use a generally simple user interface. I think for someone new, Zyro is a bit more intuitive. If you've used Wix, there are lots of features you're going to find similar, and many of the sticking points on Wix won't be found on Zyro.

From a pricing standpoint, for a business website, you will probably spend 1/3 less using Zyro than Wix. I don't see the benefit of using a Wix site for the additional money for the average business owner.

As mentioned, there's no learning curve to building with Zyro compared to Wix, so I strongly recommend Zyro for your business website.

When you compare Wix versus Zyro from an eCommerce standpoint, you've got to be sure to compare features that you want and need. Consider tasks and time to make sure you select the right option for your business.

From a price standpoint, Zyro is much more affordable. You will pay more than double the price for a Wix website compared to Zyro. Now, keep in mind that Wix does offer a Google advertising coupon so that you can get hundreds of dollars of advertising credits on Google. If you're going to spend money advertising, this needs to be considered.

If you're a dropshipper, Wix has some integrated features that can be an enormous benefit and time saver. Additionally, if you're going to be shipping customer purchases, Wix customers have access to end-to-end fulfillment features that, again, can massively save you time and money.

Weebly vs. Zyro

Weebly is another popular web building software that offers straightforward building capabilities. Comparing the two, Zyro offers you more features at a comparable price.

Additionally, you have greater flexibility to make your website reflect you and your business with the expanded features. Now, in the past, I've told people if you want a functional website built fast that's attractive and nice, Weebly's a great option. Zyro changes this slightly because nothing could make the website created quicker or more straightforward with their AI-powered building option!

Zyro offers many more features & Benefits for a similar amount of money, while both are extremely user-friendly

Both of these are solid options for someone building their first website, and I'd recommend Zyro over Weebly because of the added features and the room to develop your business without needing to search for another website platform.
